Corey Castillo, Ed.D.

*Executive Development & Performance Leader/Director of Major Accounts
United Way of Greater Los Angeles*

Corey began his career as a personal trainer, while pursuing a Bachelor's Degree in Movement & Sports Science. Within a few years, he fulfilled his first management role overseeing a group of 5 fitness professionals. When observing the reasons behind the collective successes, and failures, that he and his team were experiencing, Corey began to better understand that every organization essentially performs within the pillars of people, process, and product, directed by managers and led by leaders - two very different roles for very different needs. He continued to study and practice the fundamentals of management and leadership, within various teams and arenas, consistently learning about how teams deliver upon set missions.

While leading initiatives between 5 and 1,500 team members across various markets, Corey further grew his leadership skills while pursuing a Doctorate of Education in Organizational Leadership. After successfully delivering upon over 20 major assignments within the private sector arena, he transitioned his career to operate within Corporate Philanthropy, joining one of the world's largest nonprofit organizations. He is currently overseeing a development and fundraising team, managing top and highest-revenue corporate accounts for his organization.

Corey believes that all organizations perform under the fundamental pillars of people, process, and product, in which "leadership is the key ingredient in equipping the people to execute the process that delivers the product." Organizations will naturally decompose, as no group of people will ever naturally find a congruent path towards a set vision. It's leadership that keeps them together to perform and deliver upon a set mission. Corey believes in the fundamentals of focus, transparency, alignment, accountability, and decisive action. With respect to these fundamentals, a leader's responsibility to his/her team, and those they serve, is to own them by consistently earning the right to enforce them. Leadership is not a formal role. It is a right that must be renewed each day.
